

Los Angeles III: The Human Condition

Friday, November 25th

The Friday after Thanksgiving was a full day including a fantastical science museum, an abandoned hospital full of art and an amazing bookstore. I started off by heading downtown.

Bradbury Building and second Blade Runner reference. Although my recollection of Blade Runner involves fewer holiday ornaments.

I found a parking spot, talked to a random passing pedestrian and confirmed, again, that I had indeed driven it all the way from Ohio. He was a former Ohioan whose father is a sculptor in Columbus so we had lots of overlap. Then I headed a few blocks over to enjoy coffee and another amazing breakfast burrito at Grand Central Market.

Inside Grand Central Market

GCM is basically a covered collection of vendors, for Ohioans it's like a larger version of the North Market. Breakfast burritos are totally a thing in Southern California and, when done well, are amazing. It's not a quick process, always takes about 10 minutes or more but that means freshly cooked, crispy hash browns. I'm typing this from Ohio and feeling very sad right now.

Eventually I waddled off, checked out the Bradbury Building (above) and then went to The Last Bookstore. It's an amazing place, a couple of floors of books, art and nooks full of treasure.

Instructions: If locked in vault scream loudly. Also another Ohio reference.

The Last Bookstore

I made a purchase and tried not to hyperventilate about adding anything to my already stuffed bags. Then it was off to the Human Condition. I'm not sure how long that link will work, but this is an abandoned old hospital which they took over and added 3 floors of contemporary art. I visited the last weekend it was open (lots of shows end as November does) so I think it's only up in virtual form now, but it was super cool.

I suppose I should call out that there are a lot of pictures to follow, some of which might be NSFW.

Los Angeles III: The Human Condition

All proper attire must be worn beyond this point!

Los Angeles III: The Human Condition

various Moss Girls by Kim Simonsson.

Los Angeles III: The Human Condition

Early Conversion of IV to Oral
Antimicrobial Therapy in Community-
Acquired Pneumonia
Robert Siegel, MD, FCCP
T97-211
TRT-24.56

STUDY NO.	DATE	EXAM
1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20

UNIT NUMBER _____
PATIENT NAME _____

NUCLEAR MED.

PLEASE KEEP FILMS IN ORDER
WITH
LAST EXAMINATION TO THE FRONT

MT

"Trophy" (detail) by Matthew Day Jackson

Kitchen in Baker-Miller Pink by Chris Reynolds

The Kitchen!! The color Baker-Miller Pink has been (sometimes) found to have appetite suppressant qualities so Reynolds painted a kitchen with it. There's a cookbook, all blank, pink pages; the more you "read" the less you feel like eating. Also an box with a fan emitting a not-unpleasant but theoretically also appetite suppressant smell, and a video in a secret closet playing cooking shows inverted and in pink.

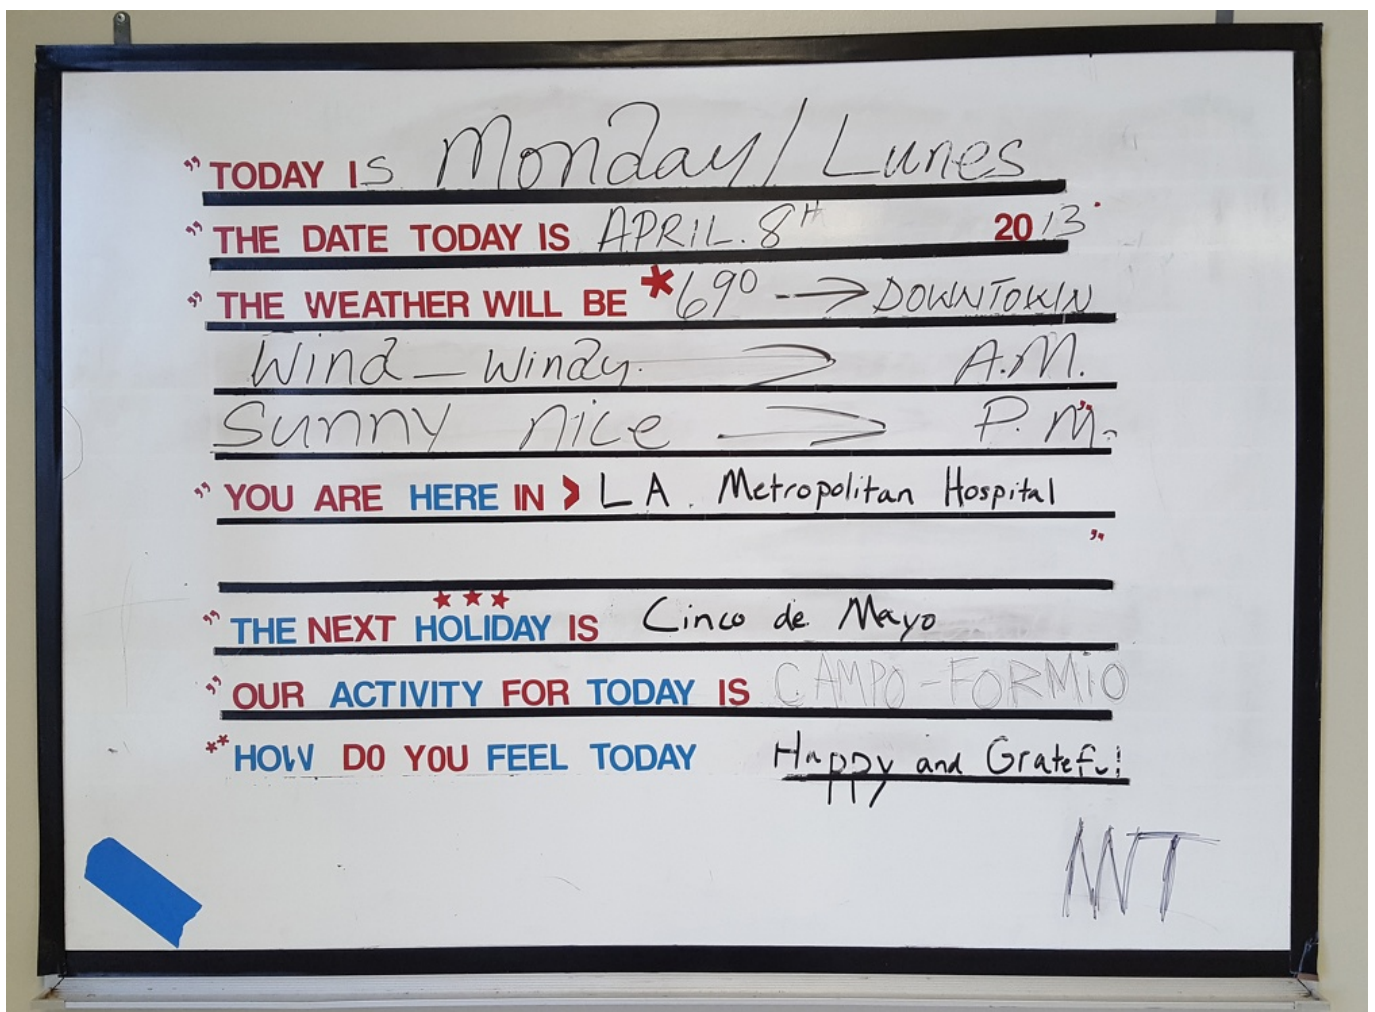

Exploring nooks and crannies of the hospital. Creative expression stored here.

Los Angeles III: The Human Condition

"Aurora Australis" by Gintare Bandinskaite

I'm a big fan of art in bathrooms. No, really. It's a thing, although sorely underrepresented in this show. There are some great examples of the art being integrated with the space, but for the most part I felt like there was a lot of opportunity lost by bringing in work that wasn't designed explicitly to be here. Which is what you get when you gather pieces from a bunch of heavy hitters in the field, a trade-off which is difficult to argue against.

Lunes at the hospital.

"Meezus: Suck" and hidden words by Kendell Carter

If you happened to notice the faint words scrawled on the wall in this room you might figure out to turn out the lights and expose the hidden glow-in-the-dark graffiti. I loved this part, despite causing initial consternation among my fellow wanderers.

"Cast" by Kendell Carter

Los Angeles III: The Human Condition

This sculpture is simple, easy to pass by, and super creepy the more you stare at it.

"Wall Mural" (detail) by Michael Haight

Los Angeles III: The Human Condition

Do you know whose work is incredibly creepy? Polly Borland's. I really like this one, which was by far the least unsettling. At least at first.

"Pink Nail" by Marilyn Minter

Los Angeles III: The Human Condition

Works by Daniel Arsham & Tony Matelli

"Untitled (Couple)" by Nick van Woert

OPERATING ROOM SCHEDULE						NVT
PATIENT	SURGEON	ATTENDING	PROCEDURE	REMARKS	ANES- THESILOGIST	R.N.
GARCIA	GERSH	NEESE	GALL BLADDER	FAMILY HISTORY "FIVE F'S"	NUBIE	SAYLOR
POLLARD	VENEGAS	GERASIMOVA	TONGUE ADJUSTMENT	PITUITARY ISSUES GROWTH HORMONES	NUBIE	HILL
FEIMSTER	TOM SICK	GERASIMOVA	COSMETIC - FACE	BEARD REMOVAL	FLEMING	DONALD
HOLONACH	SLIWA	DUGALLY	UNG TRANSPLANT	—	FLEMING	WILL

Operating Room Schedule

Los Angeles III: The Human Condition

Untitled by Tanya Batura

Los Angeles III: The Human Condition

Works by Johan Tahon

"Aha, this is for me" (Delighted) by Marc Horowitz

"Postpartum of the 15%" by Holly Rockwell

Los Angeles III: The Human Condition

"Man I" by Lionel Sabatte

Time & Distance

Los Angeles III: The Human Condition

So that's a glimpse into the really astounding Human Condition. As with nearly everything I did, an awesome recommendation by Anne Elisabeth and I'm so happy to have seen it. This whole day did strange things to my brain, and what I saw continues to reverberate in lovely ways.

After leaving the hospital grounds, I headed off towards the Museum of Jurassic Technology.

I have no idea where or what this is. I just drove by it and then swung a u-turn (legal here!) to get a photo.

Random building encountered on the way. LA is so big and sprawly and has these treasures scattered all throughout.

It's hard to know what to say about the MJT. It's a magical place, perhaps a science museum based on things that never happened but should have. The place strongly resonates the parts of my brain long inhabited by Borges. I'd read a friend's copy of "Mr. Wilson's Cabinet of Wonder" a few years back (thank you, Joe!) but when I showed up at the museum I'd forgotten that this place was from that book. I spent most of the time wandering around feeling this strange cross of déjà vu and like I had a narrator in my head repeating a story similar to what I was observing. Made the experience that much more disconcerting and fabulous.

The Museum of Jurassic Technology: it doesn't allow photos and you should totally go. One of my favorite exhibits was "Obliscence, Theories of Forgetting and the Problem of Matter" by Geoffrey Sonnabend. My gift to you.